Rugby team ready for Final Four

Pacific Coast
Champions
one step closer to national title

Franklin Leiva
DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Whitman College may have a new way to spell domination — S-P-A-R-T-A-N-S.

The San Jose State University women's rugby team rocked the Whitman College Motherfuckers 56-0 to become the Pacific Coast Champions, and put SJSU in the Final Four Division II Tournament in Columbus, Ohio.

Spartan team captain Christina Francisco said she was excited to travel to Ohio for a chance to become the national champions.

"This is our year," Francisco said. "We are ready to take it all the way to become champions."

Francisco was the game's leading scorer with three tries.

"We were fired up, we have been training all year to make it to the finals, and we did it," Francisco said.

The Spartans first points were put on the board five minutes into the game, when Shanna Philpot scored a diving try at the right corner of the end zone from three yards out.

The extra-point was no good and the score was 5-0.

SJSU struck again two minutes later with a 50-yard run by Danick Rhodes.

Karen Pryme widened the lead five minutes later by bulldozing through the middle of the defense

SJSU student wins $10 million

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A San Jose State University student won $10 million Saturday in an Internet company promotion and said he will use some of the money to buy his parents a house.

"I'm so in shock right now. I'm speechless," Lee Troung, 24, said by telephone from a studio at CBS.

Troung was selected randomly from among four finalists in the "iWon.com Annual $10 Million Giveaway" special, which CBS televised live two days before Tax Day. The IRS gets nearly $3.5 million of the prize.

Troung said he planned to buy a house for his parents, who run a family restaurant.

He said they haven't had a day off since fleeing South Vietnam on April 30, 1975.

The family lived in Winston-Salem, N.C., before moving to San Jose, where Troung is a graphic design student at San Jose State University.

The iWon.com giveaway was the culmination of a gimmick in which the Web portal company periodically dispensed prize money to people who visited the site.

CBS owns a majority share in the company.

Campus amidst exodus of top administrators

Donna Carmichael
DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

It's getting lonely at the top. Numerous prominent members of the campus community are leaving San Jose State University for a variety of reasons — but all of the departures are occurring over a relatively short period of time.

"This entire wing is leaving," said Carey Netzloff, an administrative assistant at institutional planning and resources, mostly referring to the retirement of his boss, associate vice president Edd Burton.

Down the hall, on the first floor of the Administration Building, Linda Bain, provost and vice president for academic affairs, is set to leave by midsummer.

And, in the office next to Bain, in Academic Affairs, is the provost's executive assistant Veril Phillips — also leaving — to join his spouse whose employer transferred her to Texas, Bain said.

A few doors away from the provost, is the office of the Academic Senate where Administrative Analyst Lydia Rose left in February.

At that time, Rose said she was returning to a suburb of Los Angeles where the cost of living wasn't as steep as it is in Silicon Valley. Rose's departure appeared to be unexpected and the office of the Academic Senate has been functioning with student help and part-time staff since the beginning of semester.

Across the grassy quad, Tower Hall has not been spared.

President Caret's executive assistant Dan Buerger is retiring and will vacate his office by early summer, leaving the president short in two key positions closest to the top. The other position is the provost's.

Buerger has served SJSU's past three presidents as executive

Movie company chairman eager for Latin film explosion

Jessica Neu
DAILY STAFF WRITER

Although the American music industry has recently boasted about a "Latin explosion," Lawrence Martin, chairman of New Latin Pictures, said what the country really needs is a Latin film explosion.

Martin spoke to an audience of 30 about his crusade to bring the Latino experience to the American people via film, something Martin referred to as the "American Latino Cinema Movement," Thursday evening in Sweeney Hall at San Jose State University.

Martin's visit was prompted by an invitation from Artistas de Aztlan, SJSU's newly established club devoted to the promotion of Chicano and Chicana art.

Martin said coming to SJSU all the way from Seaside, his town of residence, didn't bother him. "After all, it is my alma mater," Martin said.

After offering a history of Spanish-speaking films in America, Martin gave a brief account of his own history with films and his motivation for making Latino films for the American public.

Warren's facts nothing more than absurdity

Court Warren's assertion in your April 6 article that collegiate apparel has never "in fact" been proven to be made in sweatshops is absurd.

Here at Yale, students who traveled to Central America in August 1999 proved that Anvil-brand Yale T-shirts sold on campus for $17 are made in an El Salvador factory called Apple Tree, where 30 workers collectively earn three cents for each shirt they sew.

Apple Tree does not provide workers with clean drinking water, forces overtime and fires workers for making even the mildest complaints.

Clearly this collegiate apparel-producing factory is a sweatshop. Testimony from Apple Tree Workers can be read online at www.nlcnet.org.

Warren also claims the Worker Rights Consortium is funded by the garment worker union UNITE.

A visit to the WRC Web site, www.worker-rights.org, will show that the WRC is in fact funded by its member universities, not by UNITE. WRC member universities and their students care about the safety and dignity of garment workers in every country.

The WRC shelters no "political" agenda of protectionism as Warren ignorantly accuses.

Free speech protects prayer

This is a response to the opinion article titled "Keep Prayer Sacred and Out of Schools" by Trisha Santos, published April 7.

I fail to see how Trisha Santos proved her statement "But prayer does not belong in public schools," when she said that she prays before an exam.

I am in support of free speech and her right to say anything she wants in that article just as it is the right of anybody to pray out loud or in front of people if they want to.

Santos said, "Supporters of school prayer claim the ban has caused society's steady moral decline ... But according to Mother Jones magazine ... the belief in religion and spirituality is stronger than ever."

Being spiritual and being moral (morality according to society's definition) are two entirely different things.

Santos has a right to quote Mathew 6:6, but I'd like to point out the error of not reading in context. Jesus Christ said in Mathew 6:5 to not be like the hypocrites who pray to be seen (their motives are wrong) by others. Jesus prayed in front of people in many situations but with pure motives.

Cartoon compared to abortion issue

You used a King Solomon story (1 Kings 3:16-18) as a political cartoon on April 10 to make the point that Elian Gonzalez should be given alive to his father instead of torn apart by political fighting.

By the same logic, a child should be given alive to a loving parent/parents (birth or adoptive) instead of, as the political cartoon states, "no choice but to cut the kid in two" of abortion.

Knight: tough love coach or weak buffoon

Your schoolwork sucks. I'm going to wipe my ass with it and show it to you with a hail of expletives coming out of my mouth. Then, I will pick up a chair and heave it at you.

And if you piss me off again, I will grab you by the neck and choke you.

Welcome to a what-if scenario where your teachers act like Indiana University's Bobby Knight.

For those who have no idea, Bobby Knight was once a great college basketball coach with a bad temper. While his teams now aren't favorites to win future NCAA championships, he still has a marquee name.

Knight has also come under fire for his anger. The man famous for tossing chairs and occasionally chewing out a referee or a reporter, Knight is under fire for having choked one of his players in a practice a few years ago. Footage of Knight choking former guard Neil Reed appeared on CNN last week.

OK, I'm not an athlete. And I do know that you can't coddle someone all the time.

But there does exist a limit in how "tough" a program can get. I don't think choking players or getting into brawls are acceptable.

There is a danger in Knight's coaching. While it may get some people to get up, it may make a truly talented player — who could succeed — quit. His coaching style may even be mimicked by little league coaches and parents. There are enough horror stories about parents and coaches who go over the edge in kids' sports. It doesn't look good to have a bad example like Knight around to justify their psychotic behavior.

Unfortunately, I must be alone in thinking this.

Five hundred or so supporters showed up at Indiana University to support Knight. Former players support their coach in the newspapers. Hordes of calls on sports talk radio have people buying that Knight shouldn't be thrown out for simply putting his kids through "tough love" training.

Yes, Knight has his positives. While his players aren't being sought in National Basketball Association drafts, they are graduating on time with diplomas — and without police rap sheets. Knight recruits eligible players by the rules as well.

But then there's the average idiot fan that rears his head on the radio and keeps me sticking to my guns.

One guy I heard said his antics were the same as the ones he had in the Marine Corps. Both he and the bad radio host agreed that Knight's style is acceptable.

Yes, sometimes kicking ass and hazing 'n' razing like a Marine Corps drill sergeant is the only way things get done or improve. Hey, that's how the actual bad-asses in the armed forces get trained to survive the rigors of the battlefield.

But remember that word: battlefield. Last time I checked, the only people who saw playing areas as a war zone were overzealous coaches, a few gung-ho players and fat sports-writers trying to sound poetic in describing a field of green grass or a wooden court.

Here's the difference:

Soldiers are trained and disciplined to survive a hail of bullets, mines, bombs and other horrifying battlefield situations to win a war that may affect everyone's life.

College athletes are trained and may or may not be disciplined to win a few dozen games — and hopefully a championship — for their university. They may also get a shot at a pro-league contract so they won't end up as another Average Joe ex-jock.

While he is under review by Indiana University, it is highly likely Knight will continue to coach there. He won't be fired for walking around with soiled toilet paper and holding it up for his players to see.

Rather, it will depend on his teams doing poorly again. Yep, a clean image is nothing if you're very successful in sports. Bobby Knight could have a team with a perfect record and get away with anything short of murder with the sporting world's level of ethics.

However, Knight hasn't won a NCAA championship since 1987. His team hasn't won a division title in seven years. Hell, his team was knocked off again in the first round of this year's NCAA championship when Reed's accusations were coming to light.

While Knight's earlier victories and his supporters are strong, all it takes is a losing season or two and Indiana U. could be shopping for a new head coach.

Finishing that last sentence, a thought comes to mind. This sort of thing couldn't happen in San Jose State University's athletic program, could it?

Nah. We're not that good, nor that desperate, yet.

I think.

Jackass students' costumes can't cover up immaturity

There have always been those individuals in almost every society who walk to the beat of a different drum.

Dennis Rodman, for instance, is one of those guys who seems like he needs to get the attention of everybody in the immediate area, as evidenced by his bridal gown attire, patchwork of tattoos on his body and his low-key — read: always in the news — relationship with Carmen Electra.

As one of the NBA's all-time top rebounders ever, Rodman can at least back up his outrageous appearance and brash attitude with performance in his field.

This is where Rodman differs from members of the not-so-prestigious club made up of dedicated pointless exhibitionists, who insist on acting like jackasses for the sole net effect of acting like a jackass.

Case in point: Friday through Sunday, the University of La Verne in Southern California hosted the California Intercollegiate Press Association convention, an annual meeting of four-year college journalism programs.

A delegation from a Southern California university showed up on each of the two award nights dressed — and undressed — in various loud, nasty outfits. Some displayed a '70s motif, some just looked extra slutty.

Fine. This school has a reputation as both a "party school," and as having an award-winning journalism program.

They have a tradition of dressing up in costume for this event.

That's fine, too.

What is not fine is the police from Claremont — where the hotel that hosted the delegates was located — were summoned at least twice to quiet a party in one of the rooms in which the delegates were staying.

We know this because one of their delegates asked around as to "where the party could be" on account of their rooms being under closer supervision than normal.

College kids will want to misbehave and see what they can get away with when parents or advisors are not around.

Even though most of the "kids" at this convention were old enough to vote — thus making them adults, technically — the maturity level of people that age, wherever they may be from, lowered a notch or two when alone for a weekend.

Guests at the hotel who were not involved with the conference — and some that may have been — were most likely angered by this lack of control on the part of a delegation of would-be journalists.

This activity enters the realm of acting like jackasses for the sole effect of acting like jackasses.

For Dennis Rodman, this type of tomfoolery seems almost natural. It is part of a pattern established years ago.

For the delegates who acted foolishly, this seems as though it may not be an everyday thing.

Neither Rodman nor the delegation in question have license to act the way they do.

As an aspiring journalist, I wonder what perspective employers would think if they knew of the nonsense these immature students perpetrated during the weekend.

I hope that this school's delegates are proud of the way they conducted themselves.

They should know that hardly any of the delegates from the other schools thought too highly of the party school, even though they did well in garnering awards.

What the other schools will remember is not the party college's take-home haul but what jackasses they were.

Rodman can rebound. Can they?

Media unfairly judges athletes

In the past few months, there have been more athletes arrested for a variety of different reasons.

The unfortunate thing is that the media is quick to judge the athletes.

Whatever happened to innocent until proven guilty?

In some situations, the athletes are in fault. There are also times that it's not the athlete, but someone who is with athlete who is indeed the criminal. But since the athlete is in the public eye, he is the one that gets the negative exposure.

The negative exposure, which is received by the athlete, can cause the athlete to miss out on lucrative contracts.

In this world, we are made to believe that athletes have everything. In reality the freedom we have, they really don't.

If you go out and get in a fight at a bar, you can go to work the next day and nobody will know and you will still have a job.

Now, if an athlete goes and gets in a fight, it will haunt him for the rest of his career, even if it wasn't his fault.

Now, is that fair?

Christina Francisco eludes the Whitman College defense in the Spartans' 56-0 win. Francisco was the leading scorer with three tries during Saturday's game against the Motherruckers at Spartan Field. The Spartans finished with a record of 6-0.

powering her way to the end zone to make the score 15-0.

The Motherruckers tried to engineer a comeback many times, but each attempt proved to be unsuccessful.

One of the Motherruckers players was running in the open field when Spartan Erica Elliott knocked her down with a full-speed tackle as the crowd cheered. Elliott's antics were not over though.

She was later given a yellow card for high-tackling. Elliott was unavailable for comment because she collapsed later in the game after complaining of dizziness.

Elliott was taken to Kaiser Hospital on Santa Teresa Blvd., where she was treated and released. She is now fine, according to Spartan coach Karl Laucher.

Melissa Ciotta and Philpot both scored consecutive tries within the first five minutes of the second half, extending the Spartans' lead to 30-0.

Senior Carrie Burr scored two consecutive tries, including a 30-yard run which she kicked to herself, to make the score 44-0. Francisco scored the last two tries to end the onslaught.

Burr said the victory came thanks to a team effort.

"We had some injuries, but our teamwork was great," Burr said. "We just raised our level of play to conquer the victory."

Coach Karl Laucher said he credits the resilience of his players.

"I took a bunch of kids that were not recruits, had no scholarships and all I did is showed them how to play," Laucher said. "The competitiveness, the drive, the winning spirit is all their own."

"They're just a great bunch of kids who want to win and they're doing it."

The Spartans (6-0) will next face Plymouth College May 6. If they are victorious, they will play the national championship game May 7 in Columbus.

The Spartans' scoring spree was not finished.

SJSU scored again with 10 minutes to go in the first half, when Francisco scored on a 10-yard run, making the score 20-0 at the half.

Highlights from the second half came from the Spartans' offense as Whitman College seemed unable to control the ball.

SWINGING AGAINST THE GRAIN

Spartan pitching left hanging as Owls raise a hoot at plate

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Excellent pitching has set the groundwork for the San Jose State University baseball team's success this season, according to head coach Sam Piraro.

Nonetheless, in two games at Municipal Stadium against Rice, the Spartans suffered a few cracks in their once solid foundation.

In game one of the three-game series on Friday, SJSU left hander Chris Key (8-1) suffered his first loss of the season in a 6-2 defeat at the hands of the Owls in front of 302 fans. Key had seven strikeouts and gave up eight hits and two walks in the loss.

On Saturday, the Spartans pitching staff gave up nine runs and six hits in the seventh inning of a 12-5 defeat in front of crowd of 381.

Despite the two losses to Rice, the Spartans were able to remain in sole possession of first place in the Western Athletic Conference.

Spartan aces Baker and Adinolfi were not able to solve Rice's hitting attack, as the Spartans used five different pitchers in the game. Three Spartans pitched in the seventh inning alone, and were victims of included a double, a triple and a home run.

Piraro said his relief pitchers were facing an uphill battle in the seventh inning, with the bases loaded and nobody down.

"They had the bases loaded with nobody out and that was a real key point in that ball game," Piraro said. "We gambled a little bit and brought the infield in because we were hoping to get a ground ball. We did but didn't make the play and that opened things up a little bit."

"After they got two and three hits in a row, the inning just manifested itself," he continued.

In the loss, the 6-foot-5-inch Baker had four strikeouts and gave up four earned runs off eight hits in six innings. Baker's season record dropped to 6-5.

Even though the Spartans rely heavily on pitching and defense, Piraro said leaving runners on base puts unnecessary heat on other areas.

"Any time you leave runners in scoring position, when you don't take advantage of those opportunities, it puts pressure on the other aspects of your team — pitching and defense," Piraro said. "Baker was laboring because he knew he couldn't give up a lot and defensively we were trying to hard not to make a mistake."

The Spartans left a total of 10 runners on base in game two, including seven in scoring position.

Although the Spartans left a fair share of runners on base, the team did manage 14 hits against the Owls Saturday. First baseman John Fagan had a perfect day at the plate on Saturday, going 4-for-4 with two RBIs. Centerfielder Ryan Brucker had three hits. Catcher Adam Shorsler and third baseman Tony Tognetti contributed two hits each.

Despite being in fourth place in the conference standing, Fagan said his teammates did not take the Owls — who went to the 1999 World Series — lightly.

"They (the 1999 Spartans) were 1-5 against them last year, so they knew what they had," Fagan said.

The junior from La Verne, Calif. said the Spartans had to win the final game Sunday in order to defend their home turf.

"It was a tough loss on Friday, but we expected to bounce back and still win the series," he said. "We made a goal in the beginning of the season not to get swept in any series, so we have to go out there and show them we're not going to get pushed around in our own house."

Tim Adinolfi, a starting pitcher for San Jose State University, threw six innings with eight strikeouts before Chris Sherman relieved him to earn the victory over Rice Sunday. Even though the Spartans won 6-5, they lost two games out of three against Rice in the series.

Brucker's single gives SJSU victory over Rice, helps avoid sweep

Franklin Leiva
DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Spartan center fielder Ryan Brucker faced one of the most pressure-filled situations in baseball Sunday.

Bases loaded, with two outs in a tied game.

He passed the test with flying colors.

Brucker's RBI single in the bottom of the eighth inning with the bases loaded led San Jose State University past the Rice Owls 6-5 at Municipal Stadium.

praised Brucker and his team for the victory.

"Brucker is a tough kid," Piraro said. "He was poised and just like the rest of our team, he got the job done."

The win gave the Spartans their lone win in a 1-2 weekend series with Rice. They are now 26-14, and are 12-6 in Western Athletic Conference play.

The Spartans opened the first frame of the game with a five-run first inning which included a three-run home run by Brandon Macchi.

The scored remained 5-0 until the seventh inning, when Spartan starting pitcher Tim Adinolfi gave up five earned runs including two two-run doubles by Brett Smith and Jayson Gray.

The Spartans came right back in the eighth with Brucker's timely RBI single that proved to be the difference in the game.

Piraro said his team got a hard earned victory thanks to their strong character.

"We just out-tough them," Piraro said. "It was a dogfight till the end and thanks to our efforts we came out victorious."

Relief pitcher Chris Sherman (4-4) got the victory and Rice's Marc Gwin (3-3) pitched a complete game for the loss.

The Spartans will be on the road to face Santa Clara at 7 p.m. on Tuesday.

"I was just looking for a good pitch to hit," Brucker said. "I got a fastball and thankfully I hit it hard enough that it went through the middle of the infield for a single."

With Brucker's swing, SJSU held on to possession of first place in the Western Athletic Conference.

The Spartans were able to sustain their half-game edge over the second place Fresno State Bulldogs, who defeated Hawaii's 9-2 Sunday.

Martin

country," Martin said. "It belongs in America as much as English."

This is the reason Martin said he makes films sometimes with Spanish and sometimes with English dialogues.

He said that both languages permeate each other.

His first film, "Nueba Yol," which means "New York" in Puerto Rican slang, was released in 1997 and grossed $3.3 million, Martin said.

"Not too bad for a Spanish-speaking film in America," Martin said.

Besides giving a discussion about the need for more Latin films in America, Martin's visit was also an effort to raise interest about his upcoming film "Luminarias," scheduled for release on May 5 — Cinco de Mayo.

"Luminarias," which has an English dialogue, is a romantic comedy about four Latina women.

Martin gave audience members a sneak preview of the film, as well as a look at clips from "Nueba Yol."

Martin said he made "Luminarias" because there are not enough films being made about everyday Latinos and Latinas and the challenges they face on a daily basis.

"Luminarias" paints a picture of Latinas as they've never been seen before on the big screen Martin said.

"It was nice to see that a movie is finally being released about Latinas like me," said Andrea Chavez, a student from the National Hispanic University, referring to the characters being regular people.

"It is hard to find Latina characters in the movies to identify with," she said.

Martin encouraged audience members to support his film by attending the opening on Cinco de Mayo.

"You have to compel the Latin community to support films," Martin said, explaining why the formation of groups like Artistas are so important to his cause.

Mariela Miranda, Artistas president, expressed her concern that students aren't getting involved enough in the community to promote change.

"I would like to encourage students to participate in events to change the way things are," Miranda said. "If we want more films about us, we need to support them."

Nancy Garcia, an Artistas member, said movies about Latin people have had a negative focus in the past.

She specifically talked about

"American Me," an early '90s film about a Latino's thirst for power in prison.

"Movies like 'American Me' leave the viewer feeling bad at the end," Garcia said. "There needs to be more movies with happy endings that promote positive feelings."

The members of Artistas said they are confident in "Luminarias" being a step in the right direction for the Latin movie-going population.

assistant and before that was a professor in the university's English department.

Caret said Burton and Buerger have about 70 years of expertise between them at SJSU.

While Bain's and Buerger's announcements came as a surprise to the president, Burton's retirement does not.

"Edd Burton has been going to retire for the past five years, but we have managed to convince him to stay on a little longer," Caret said.

SJSU chapter president of the California Faculty Association, electrical engineering professor Jack Kurzweil, said there is probably no one on campus who understands the budget as well as Burton.

"But he (Burton) has said he will be on call to us if we need him. He won't be far away," Caret said.

Buerger will not be on call. The executive assistant is heading north Puget Sound, Wash.

"You have to know when to leave and make room for younger colleagues coming up," Buerger said.

If any of the soon to be retirees were in doubt about when to call it quits from the California State University system, Public Employees Early Retirement plan — commonly known as PERS — eased the decision-making.

The plan's latest package, pushed through the system last year, moved the retirement age down from 60 to 55 without loss of benefits, said political science professor James Brent.

"That's probably a factor in so many leaving now, as well as demographics. Many came into the system in the '60s and they have hit retirement age," Brent said.

But history professor Jonathan Roth said there is something overlooked in PERS.

"It's the older staff and faculty who can afford to live here. They have homes," Roth said.

Another prominent staff member about to retire is Dr. Robert Latta, director of the Student Health Center.

Latta said his duties as director will end June 1 and will be moving south to the San Luis Obispo area, so he can be near family.

"We are about to name an interim director of the Student Health Center. It's going to be someone from the inside. That's all I can say right now," Latta said.

Buerger praised Latta as a fine physician and administrator.

"We will conduct a search for a full-time director," Buerger said, adding that affordability was an issue.

In other areas of the administration, two key players left University Advancement for other opportunities.

Kathleen Quinn, associate vice president for development, recently left to take up a similar post at Stanford.

"She was the one who went out there and really did the fund raising for us," said public affairs officer Sylvia Hutchinson.

"But Stanford was closer to home. She lives up that way," Hutchinson added.

Quinn follows Carol Menaker, director of communications, who left University Advancement for a public relations agency in San Jose a few months ago.

Both Quinn's and Menaker's positions remain open, Hutchinson said.

But the most important person leaving is Jean Taketa, according to Kurzweil.

Taketa works in Human Resources management and attends to all faculty and staff benefits matters.

"The faculty and staff have relied on her for about 35 years. She is irreplaceable," Kurzweil said. "There isn't a staff or faculty member who wouldn't agree with that."

Several members of the Academic Senate, including Chair Mary Jo Gorney-Moreno, said the provost would be tough to replace.

"She is such a great provost. She's just brilliant," said the chair, shaking her head in dismay.

"Other than that, I am confident we will make these transitions fairly smoothly. There are so many qualified people on campus who can step in for the interim," Gorney-Moreno noted.

Two academic senators, professors Roth and Brent, expressed concern for student issues with the departure of Bain — such as more study space — something the provost "really went to bat for," Roth said.

But the issues championed by the provost will continue, according to Caret, who said he would be seeking "the same qualities" in a new provost that he looked for when he chose Bain five years ago.

Brent noted there was a generalized sense of apprehension regarding all the top-level departures and said the impact of so much expertise lost might have an affect on long-term planning.

"That might get hurt a little, but we have been around a long time," he said. "I'm sure we'll muddle through."

Kurzweil put a different spin on it.

"This place runs because of administrative assistants and secretaries and most of them are women," he said.

"It would take a year to notice an administrator was gone, but if most of the secretaries and administrative assistants were to leave at once, the administrators wouldn't have a clue," Kurzweil quipped.

"The whole university would collapse."

Gore meets with striking janitors

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vice President Al Gore, seeking support from Hispanics, Roman Catholics and labor unions, declared his solidarity with striking janitors in the nation's second-largest city on Sunday, then met with the region's influential Cardinal Roger Mahony.

One day after mingling with Hollywood's elite donors at the largest estate in Beverly Hills, Gore returned his attention to the working class.

"The position of president is the only one filled by someone who has the responsibility to fight for all of the people, not just the wealthy and the powerful, the connected, the influential, but all of the people, including the janitors!" Gore said.

"Your cause is just, and you are gaining the ears and hearts of the people in the community," he said.

The presumptive Democratic presidential nominee spoke in English and in Spanish from atop a flatbed truck at a rally of more than 1,000 people, nearly all of them Hispanics, and received a boisterous show of support.

The crowd thundered a warm greeting in Spanish as Gore took the makeshift stage.

Some 8,500 janitors have been striking across the Los Angeles area since April 3.

They generally earn between $6.80 and $7.90 and are seeking wage increases of $1 a year for each of the next three years.

Contractors have offered more modest raises and talks broke down again on Friday.

Gore, a Southern Baptist, chose Palm Sunday for his first meeting with Mahony, the archbishop of the Los Angeles Diocese.

Mahony has spoken out forcefully in support of the striking janitors.

Gore, seeking to protect his lead in the nation's largest state, used the events to shore up support among three key voter blocs.

Many of the striking janitors are Hispanic — a group that makes up 15 percent of the electorate in vote-rich California, and one presumptive Republican nominee George W. Bush is aggressively pursuing.

Millions of Californians, and an overwhelming number of Hispanics, are Roman Catholic.

And Gore is counting on labor support for donations and to get out the vote on Election Day.

Asked about protests outside meetings of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund back in Washington, Gore said, "I think that the world bank does a great deal to alleviate poverty around the world. If there are ways that the world bank can do a better job of attacking those problems, then I know they'll be very interested in listening with an open mind to useful suggestions. If the protesters simply condemn them without offering constructive suggestion, that could be another matter."
